

ANGELIA L. WHITE
CEO and Publisher, Hope for Women Magazine

Angelia White's axiom, "Live, Dream, Inspire," is what motivated her in 2000 to embark on an extraordinary journey to create a lifestyle magazine for diverse women of faith — a magazine that speaks to all women from all walks of life. What began as a simple idea blossomed into an amazing, faith-defining endeavor.

Having connecting her God-given passion with a purpose, Angelia decided to step out on faith with her dream. She began her mission to present beauty, fashion, and lifestyle issues for today's aspiring woman. Angelia envisioned a magazine synchronizing diverse women of faith, inspired by true-life stories, providing powerful lessons that inspire, provide hope, and encourage change.

In 2005, Angelia experienced the loss of her grandmother and father within a two-month time period. It was during these difficult times that she was able to discern how short and precious life truly is. Inspired by these revelations, she knew that it was time to take concrete steps toward fulfilling her dream. In May 2005, with strong faith and determination, her vision evolved into the reality of Hope for Women magazine.

God has continually guided and directed her entirely throughout this journey, and He continues to open selective doors, leading her to individuals who share the same intriguing passion. More importantly, He has blessed Angelia with a supportive family and friends who not only believed in her vision but also continue to make it a reality. She is blessed to be surrounded by a wonderful team of dedicated individuals who are committed to making Hope for Women magazine exactly as she envisioned.

White created Hope for Women LLC and serves as CEO and Publisher of Hope for Women magazine. She makes her home with her husband, Johnny, Sr., and their three children in Muncie, Ind., where the publication is headquartered.

About Hope for Women
